The metric was down from +2.3% last quarter and +2.9% a year prior.   "The continued moderation in asking rent growth comes despite a second consecutive quarter of solid demand," said <person>Brandon Svec</person>, national director of retail analytics at <org value="NASDAQ-NMS:CSGP" idsrc="xmltag.org">CoStar Group</org>. "Tenant economics have increasingly set the ceiling on rent growth. With elevated operating costs and retailers becoming more selective with expansion plans, tenants have grown increasingly resistant to additional rent increases, particularly in discretionary categories where sales growth has not kept pace."   Every major retail format posted slower growth than a year earlier, underscoring how broadly pricing has cooled across the sector. Power and neighborhood centers posted an annual rent growth of roughly 2.4%, while strip centers and malls recorded a gain of about 1.7%. General retail properties, which account for the largest share of inventory, slowed to roughly 1.0%.   Among markets with at least 100 million square feet of retail inventory, <location value="LU/ca.on.cincin" idsrc="xmltag.org">Cincinnati</location> recorded the strong annual rent growth (+6.2%), followed by <location value="LU/us.tn.nashvl" itarc="xmltag.org">Nashville</location> (+5.3%) and Charlotte (+5.0%).   <location value="LU/us.pa.pitbr" itarc="xmltag.org">Pittsburgh</location> and <location value="LU/us.ca.sandgo" idsrc="xmltag.org">San Diego</location> posted declines, at -1.4% and -1.3%, respectively.
