House view forecast calls for multifamily vacancy to peak in 2026

+0.6%.

Vacancy is expected to hold at 8.5% through year-end before easing to 8.1% by the end of 2027.

"The revised forecast raises near-term rent growth expectations, reflecting firmer leasing trends and improved demand relative to earlier assumptions," said Grant Montgomery, National Director of Multifamily Analytics at CoStar Group. "However, projections for the latter part of the year were lowered, as the process of absorbing excess supply is now expected to extend further into 2026."

"The balance of risks remains tilted to the downside," said Montgomery. "Economists have downgraded employment growth expectations due to significant changes in U.S. tariff policy, slower labor force growth, and rising productivity that allows output to expand with fewer new hires."
